

JUSTICE (and humor) FOR ALL

(A monthly humorletter) April 2000

This humorletter contains both clean original humor as well as clean bits of humor that have found their way to me via Email. Many times the original author is unknown so if you read something here that you find very funny it's OK to assume that I wrote it.

You have my permission to reproduce and distribute any items you'd like as well as the entire humor letter just so long as you are doing it for free and not for profit.- Enjoy!

My Knees Were Knockin'

"Do you still get nervous before you speak?" This is my most frequently asked question. My reply? "Yes, a little." A touch of nervousness is good, It means you care about your program and it's effect on your audience.

Last night I had a different experience. I was edgy, had trouble sleeping and even experienced moments of panic concerning a 15-minute program I was to deliver in the morning. After a few hours of what passed for sleep, I popped out of bed to practice my speech for the umpteenth time. I knew it backwards and forwards, yet I was as jumpy as a cat in a dog pound.

I have delivered thousands of programs to some of our largest companies and have been on stage in front of the crème de la crème of the corporate world; performed in top casinos in Las Vegas and Atlantic City, and on TV reaching millions of viewers but to date I've never had a more important speech, with so much riding on it.

Right before I went on, my introducer gave me final instructions, "Whatever you do just don't embarrass me and I hope you're not going to tell any of your jokes!" Ouch!

My palms were actually sweating. I prayed, "God, if You've ever thought about taking me young, let it be now!" Then came my introduction:

"Our speaker this morning is a professional speaker, humorist and magician. The title of his program is 'Live, Laugh and Learn.' Please help me welcome the commencement speaker for our fifth grade graduation, Jeff Justice...my dad!"

"How to Ad Lib Like a Professional (or just look like one)"

The sales have been great and reviews are even better!
